of cloths produced by McKinley during the latter's famous speech. Mills said that he (Mills) had nothing to take back. He had inquired into it and found that that $10 suit had been protected to the amount of $4.03. He had heard that that suit was to be photographed and used in the campaign. He wanted to photograph in the brain of every voter the fact that that $10 suit was protected to the amount of $4.03.

At the conclusion of Mills' speech, which was tumultuously applauded, all of the amendments were agreed to with the exception of that on cotton ties, on which McKinley demanded a yea and nay vote, which was ordered. It resulted yeas 170, nays 128, and the amendment was declared carried. Gear of Iowa, republican, voted with the democrats. Rowell was paired with Hoge, of West Virginia.

The previous question was then ordered on final passage of the bill and for ...

Scott ... had read a letter from Randall, asking to be paired with a friend of the bill, and expressed himself distinctly opposed to its passage.

The vote was then taken on the final passage of the bill, and resulted yeas 162, nays 149. Sowden of Pennsylvania, Greenman and Bliss of New York, democrats, voted against the bill; and Fitch of New York and Nelson of Minnesota, republicans, voted for it. The four independent members also voted aye.

When the speaker announced the passage of the bill the democrats broke into cheers, and waved bandannas wildly in the air.

Boutelle ironically moved to take recess till 8 o'clock, as this was the 27th anniversary of the battle of Bull Run.

Republicans in turn greeted this sally with laughter and applause.

A motion to adjourn until Monday was defeated, yeas 79, nays 206, and the house took recess until 8 p. m.

At the evening session of the house a bill passed to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations. It provides that such claims shall be adjudicated by three commissioners, to be appointed by the president, to be known as the court of Indian depredations.

SENATE.

The senate bill to reimburse depositors of the Freedman's bank discussed and passed. It appropriates $100,000.

The conference report on the river and harbor bill was received from the house and ordered printed.

The senate then proceeded to consideration of the fisheries treaty in open executive session, and Teller addressed the senate, after which the senate proceeded to consider bills authorizing the construction of bridges, and passed a number of such house bills with amendments.

A conference committee was appointed on the amendments, which were merely formal, and the senate adjourned till Monday.

A Surprise in the Oil Region.

Pittsburg, July 21.—There is great excitement in the oil region over the revival of the Pit Hole oil field. Pit Hole has for nearly a quarter of a century been considered a "sucked orange," and the oil right of 100,000 acres around the old town would not have brought $100. Now the excitement is greater there than in any other field in the region, not excepting that in ... Black Hole, has been pushing the drill around Pleasantville so successfully that they have been encouraged to test the old Pit Hole region, and the result is one of the surprising things of the oil region. In this old and long since abandoned territory they now have seven wells that are good for 800 barrels a month. There are some differences of opinion regarding the sand, but it is probably a lower level than the rich sand of 1865, that made Pit Hole the most famous city in the world, and gave it a population of 15,000 to 20,000 in a few months. Great activity is reported in the field among lease hunters, and large production in this old field is expected within the next few months.

Moore and Mrs. Norton in Colorado.

Denver, July 21.—An evening paper says: It is positively known that Editor Moore, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Mrs. Norton, have been in Denver and were running enough to elude the reporters, who were anticipating a visit to Denver by them. They arrived in Denver on Thursday over the Kansas Pacific and registered at a second-class hotel under assumed names. Yesterday afternoon they purchased tickets to Idaho Springs and boarded the Colorado Central train. The conductor of the train which brought the pair from Kansas City to Denver knew them by sight and made their acquaintance during the trip. They informed him that it was their intention to spend some time in the mountains. The detectives say that it was not likely that the pair would be molested by the Colorado authorities, as there would be no occasion to arrest them except upon especial request from the Missouri officers.

Stock Markets.

New York, July 21.—Money on call easy 1½; prime paper 4 to 6. The stock market to-day was the dullest that has been seen for the past three weeks, and though it was firm during most of the session final changes are for insignificant reductions in a great majority of stocks. There was no interest in trading outside of a few specialties, and fluctuations reflected the operations of traders only. Governments dull and firm.

A Cherokee Contest.

St. Louis, July 21.—The Cherokee council adjourned last night without coming to an agreement on the grazing strip lease. A bill was passed some time ago, leasing the strip for $150,000, but Chief Moyes vetoed it. With his veto message he sent to the council two bids, one for $175,000 and another for $185,000 per annum. There has been a hot fight in the council for the past three weeks. Fifteen members of the lower house in favor of the highest bid have been fighting to keep the council from passing the lesser bid over the chief's veto. The matter of lease lies over until the regular session, which will convene on the first Monday in November next.

Three Rivers, Ont., July 21.—Tidings have been received of the drowning of a party of fourteen lumbermen on Matawan river, about fifty miles above Piles. The lumbermen were dead drunk Piles. The lumbermen were dead drunk and in attempting to run the rapids their canoe was overturned and all hands perished.

Pike's Peak is the goal of a large number who visit Manitou. This is especially true of those who come here for the first time. The new arrival finds everything grand and wonderful and enticing, but the whitened summit of the massive mountain, looming up beyond the emerald foothills, has especial attractions to those who know no fear of what lies between. Dangers there are, toil and fatigue for all who accomplish the ascent, but all that is forgotten in the excitement and adventures of the journey and in the sublimity of the scenic surroundings. It is safe to say that the scenery along the trail is as grand and beautiful, weird and wild, grotesque and wonderful as any in America. Attempts to describe it are idle. Only those who have seen it understand it, and scores are daily added to the list of experienced ones. Yesterday a large party composed of guests from the principal hotels made a successful ascent. They found it cold—below freezing point—on the summit, but were all delighted with the trip. Following are their names: From the Manitou—M. Rudolf Richling, ... Dr. ... J. Dunbar, the Misses Bull, of London, H. S. Hill and ... of Staffordshire, Eng., H. F. Smith, of New South Wales. From the Iron Springs—Messrs. Phil. Rice, Lewis Delfin, and G. W. Mandeville's Punishment.

Dublin, July 21.—The Mandeville inquest was resumed to-day. A great sensation was caused by the evidence of Daniel Goulding, who was formerly warden in Tullamore jail. Goulding deposed that on the evening of November 22nd the governor of the jail said he had received orders to strip Mandeville; that he (witness) and the other five wardens entered the prisoner's cell and found him sleeping soundly; that the chief warden shook the prisoner rudely and aroused him; that Mandeville resisted, but was soon stripped naked; that he cried, "For decency's sake leave my shirt," whereupon the warden gave him his shirt in which he lay the rest of the night, refusing to put on the prison garb. Witness said he was aware that Mandeville had been punished for periods never before recorded in the warden's book.

Bankers Convicted.

Raleigh, N. C., July 21.—The trial of Cross and White, bank officials, ended to-day by conviction. Cross was sentenced to seven years hard labor, and White to a fine.

BURLINGTON'S CASE.

They are Presenting the Burlington's Proposition.

Nebraska Strikers Refuse to Abandon their Position.

Engineer Bauereisen Arraigned in a State Court.

Hoge Working for the Q.

Chicago, July 21.—A peculiar state of affairs was developed to-day when the case of conspiracy against Chairman Hoge and Murphy of the Burlington strikers was called up in court. Neither of the accused was present, and Frank Collier, attorney for the Burlington company and representing the prosecution, surprised everybody in the hearing by a request that the case be continued. Lawyer Collier explained his reason for this strange action by saying: "Hoge and Murphy are now out of the city on an extensive tour, doing virtually the company's work." Counsel for the defense made no objection to continuance and the court granted postponement for one week.

Among the Strikers.

Chicago, July 21.—A Lincoln, Neb., special to the Times says: Messrs. Hoge and Murphy arrived here this morning and were royally received by strikers and trades unions generally. In the afternoon a meeting was held. After full discussion the leaders refused to give out their action for publication, and it is generally well understood that it was decided to go on with the strike. A number of strikers, however, soundly berate Hoge for his stubbornness, and claim that if Arthur's advice had been followed all would have been satisfactory.

Bauereisen's Examination.

Chicago, July 21.—The examination of John A. Bauereisen, accused under the state laws of procuring dynamite to be brought into the state for illegal purposes, was held to-day. The principal witnesses were the informers, Bowles and Smith. They told much the same story as when before Commissioner Hoyne, and Bauereisen was held to the criminal court under bonds of $3500, which he promptly furnished.

Fire at Santa Fe.

Santa Fe, N. M., July 21.—A disastrous fire occurred in this city early this morning, by which the Catron building and opera house at the northeast corner of the plaza was totally consumed and several others injured, though not to any serious extent. This building contained the Daily New Mexican printing office, the postoffice, Wellmers' news and book store, and the offices of the extensive law firm of Catron, Knaebel & Clancy. The building and contents were almost entirely destroyed, including a portion of the night's mails awaiting distribution and delivery in the morning. The most serious loss was the very extensive and valuable library of Judge Catron, containing many rare and costly law books and manuscripts, many of which cannot be replaced. The following are the losses: New Mexican Printing company, $15,000; postoffice, $500; Spitz, jewelry establishment, $5,000; Wellmers, $7,000; Catron, Knaebel & Clancy's library, $20,000; loss on building, $30,000. The insurance is as follows: New Mexican Printing company, $1,500; Catron's library, $1,000; furniture, $1,500; Clancy's library, $200; furniture, $1,000; S. Spitz, $700; J. Wellmers, $1,000; Seligman's office furniture, $1,000.

A Stage Robbed.

San Luis Obispo, Cal., July 21.—The stage running between this place and Templeton was robbed by masked men last night while crossing the mountains about five miles from here. A robber ordered the driver to stop, and immediately covered him with a revolver. He then compelled the passengers, six in number, and the driver, to alight from the stage and covered the heads of all with masks. The passengers were placed in a row and robbed of about $500 altogether. There was one lady passenger, and nothing was taken from her. The driver was then ordered to throw off Wells-Fargo's express box and the United States mail bags. The box was chopped open and the contents, which were supposed to be about $1,000, taken. The mail was also opened and a number of letters examined. The robber collected his booty and disappeared up the mountain. The sheriff and posse are now in pursuit.

A Match for Jem Smith.

New York, July 21.—Mike Conley, of Ashland, Wis., has cabled Jem Smith, champion of England, accepting the latter's challenge to fight any man in the world, Kilrain excepted, for $2,500 a side. There seems to be every prospect that a match will be arranged. The fight is to take place either in France or Spain.

Single Sculling.

New York, July 21.—Teemer won a three-mile sculling race for a $500 purse between John Teemer, George Hosmer, Allaham and James A. Ten Eyck, which was postponed from Thursday, and rowed to-day on Jamaica bay. Time 21.30.

New Rates Enforced.

Chicago, July 21.—The new Colorado and Wyoming rates which were to go into effect July 12, and the enforcement of which has been postponed several times, has been enforced, beginning Monday.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL TICKET.

FOR PRESIDENT,
BENJAMIN HARRISON,
Of Indiana.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,
LEVI P. MORTON,
Of New York.

The proposal to change the date of the state republican convention to September [illegible]. The convention was called at too late a date. The campaign will not be under way in this state until a state ticket is put in the field. It is wise, therefore, to hold the convention not later than the beginning of September.

We publish elsewhere a clipping from the St. Paul Pioneer Press, [illegible]. Unfortunately the McKinley plank represents only a minority of the republican party. It has been disavowed again and again by republican state conventions and republican leaders. Yet this is no reason for not supporting Harrison. He needs every republican vote and no true friend of Harrison will attempt to read any republican out of the party who prefers a Blaine tariff to a Keller tariff. No true republican will fail to vote for Harrison, for no better course is offered after all [illegible] against the platform. The party can be guided in one [illegible] candidate who represents the noblest sentiments of the republican party and was an active participant in its grandest achievements.

It is said that Thurman drew the following plank of the democratic national convention of 1864:

Resolved, That this convention does explicitly declare, as the sense of the American people, that after four years of failure to restore the union by the experiment of war, during which, under the pretense of a military necessity, of a war power higher than the constitution, the constitution itself has been disregarded in every part, and public liberty and private right alike trodden down, and the material prosperity of the country essentially impaired, justice, humanity, liberty, and the public welfare demand that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities, with a view to an ultimate convention of all the states, or other peaceable means, to the end that, at the earliest possible moment, peace may be restored on the basis of the federal union of all the states.

Every ex confederate who now believes in the justice of the southern cause will [illegible] but vote for the author of these resolutions.

The Mills bill has passed the house of representatives by practically a party vote. The democratic party must therefore stand by it. The republican members lost a splendid opportunity by not presenting a substitute which should put the party right before the country. The party was pledged to reduce the surplus, and republicans should have made it clear that they were true to that pledge. A bill simply taking the duty off of sugar and leaving the rest of the tariff as it is would have accomplished this. The country had a right to expect a sincere effort to relieve the country of unnecessary taxation and to relieve it by taking the tax off of the necessities of life and not the luxuries. It is possible that the matter was left with the republican senate, however, which can mould the bill more easily. The issue that will win is the issue between free trade and protection. But this issue must be made clearly. It will be made with difficulty if no sincere attempt is made to reduce the surplus, or if those attempts are made by reducing the taxes on luxuries like whiskey and tobacco and allowing the duty to remain on sugar, rice, fruits and other necessities of life. The senate should take hold of this bill with patriotic devotion to the best interests of the country, and pass such a bill as will not permit the democrats to introduce side issues. The measure just passed is not what it pretends to be. It is a southern measure in the interest of the south. No logic can show why it is just to injure the wool growers of the Rocky mountains and continue to protect the sugar planters of the south. Nor is there any reason for putting the lumber produced in the north on the free list and continue the protection to rice. Food is more than raiment or shelter. The bill has plenty of inconsistencies but it is not enough to point them out. The republican senate must go farther and show what kind of a bill the friends of the tariff can draw. It is not time for partisanship but statesmanship. There must be construction as well as criticism; positive advocacy of a better course, as well as denunciation of the Mills bill. Whatever mistakes were made in the platform can now be easily corrected by the republican senate. We believe the Allisons and Shermans will rise to the occasion.

Good Sense.

St. Paul Pioneer Press (Rep.)

The Mankato Free Press, which is a sort of [illegible] the Minneapolis Tribune, follows the lead of that paper in [illegible] Pioneer Press [illegible] [illegible] of the party because it [illegible] do not approve of some of the [illegible] the McKinley [illegible] duties [illegible] whiskey in the republican platform.

The Pioneer Press has been endeavoring to show that there was no reason why the large body of republicans in the northwest who believe that the tariff might be reformed without prejudice to the protected industries of the country or to the protective principle, should not give an earnest and enthusiastic support to the republican ticket—and that in view of the present position and antecedents of both the great parties on all the great vital questions of governmental policy [illegible]

Do the Minneapolis Tribune and its Mankato echo really mean to insist that there is no place in the republican party for the tens of thousands of republicans in this state and throughout the north west who do not believe that the existing tariff is the ultimate perfection of human wisdom, who agree with the last previous republican national convention in favoring a "judicious revision of the tariff," and with the last republican state convention that its "inequalities should be corrected"?

[The national platform of 1884 read: "The democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus. The republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus."]

Do those two sheets really think the republican party would be strengthened by reading out of it all who, while adhering to the great fundamental principles of the republican party, reserve the right [illegible] phases of those which change with every season like the fashions in dress?

The objection to the tariff plank of the Chicago platform is that it undertakes to define a new and specific revenue policy, about which there is, and must necessarily be a wide diversity of opinion among republicans, instead of stopping with the assertion of a principle upon which republicans generally are agreed.

There are probably nearly 130,000 republicans in this state who are in hearty accord with the underlying principle of that plank—that of protection—but who [illegible] the form and method of applying this principle to home industries. There is probably not one in a hundred who would subscribe to the new fangled fiscal policy for the first time laid down in that platform which looks to the abolition of all internal revenue taxes on tobacco and whiskey as a means of reducing the surplus rather than touch a single [illegible] tariff. [illegible] of this [illegible] of Mr. Kelley [illegible] the republican doctrine of protection are well known. But it is a heretical innovation, which was never a part of republican doctrine or practice, and is contrary to the whole tenor of its policy in the past. There is no reason to suppose it will ever be its policy in the future. No republican is bound by it unless he happens to be individually in accord with it.

A Post Route in Russia.

It must, however, be borne in mind that the Russian post route is a very different thing from the old English post route, and that the Russian horse express differs widely, not only from our own western "pony express," but from the horse expresses of most other countries. The characteristic feature of the two European and American systems is that, generally speaking, the [illegible] at regularly stated hours, or, in other words, runs upon a prearranged time schedule. It is precisely this feature which the Russian system does not have. There are, generally speaking, no stage coach lines in Russia; the vehicles which carry the mails do not carry passengers, and, away from the railroads, there is no such thing as traveling upon a fixed time schedule. You are never obliged, therefore, to wait for a public conveyance which leaves at a certain stated hour, and then go through to your destination in that conveyance, stopping when it stops and starting when it starts, without regard to your own health, comfort or convenience.

On the contrary, you may ride in your own sleigh or carriage, and have it drawn by post horses. You may travel at the rate of 175 miles in twenty-four hours, or twenty-four miles in 175 hours, just as you feel inclined. You may stop when you like, where you like, and for as long a time as you like, and when you are ready to move on you have only to order out your horses and get into your vehicle. It makes no difference in what part of the empire you may happen to be, nor to what part you may wish to go. Send your podorozhnaya to the nearest post station, and in twenty minutes you will be rolling away at the rate of ten miles an hour, with your postal order in your pocket and a hundred relays of fresh horses distributed at intervals along your route.—George Kennan in The Century.

[illegible] Demand for Horses.

In a lecture on "Horse Breeding," delivered by James Wood, of Westchester county, N. Y., occurred the following statements: The demand for horses is constantly increasing. Europe cannot supply her own needs. Great Britain annually imports 20,000 from other countries. The immense armies of the continent are making an ever increasing demand, and if the threatening war cloud bursts the destruction of horses will be so great that this demand will be beyond the possibility of supply. It is freely announced in Europe that America alone can meet these demands. Competent officers from the German, French and English armies have made extensive examinations in this country as to our equine resources, and have made very full reports to their respective governments. Even in times of peace they are drawing upon us.

The demands of our home markets are constantly increasing. In New York city alone 14,000 horses die every year, and as many more become lame or are otherwise disabled and are sent into the country, from which they never return. Increasing business makes increasing demands, and while the substitution of electricity for horse power upon the street railways [illegible] inferior horses [illegible] requirements of new industries will more than counterbalance this, but probably in superior grades.

RICH MEN OF CHICAGO.

Walter Wellman Writes of the Millionaires Who Live in the City by the Lake.

[Special Correspondence.]

CHICAGO, July 19.—So far as I know there is but one millionaire in this city who made his money on the Board of Trade, and he was a broker and not a speculator. John [illegible] named is the only one whom the cashiers gave that rating when they made up their little list. Lester has made some big deals on his own account, but the bulk of his fortune has been acquired by commissions on other people's deals. [illegible] Hutchinson has, doubtless, made a good deal of money on the board, where he is an inveterate scalper, always ready to quit as soon as he gets a profit, no matter how small, but his great gut [illegible] in the pork packing line. He has also done well in real estate. I should say that two-thirds of the millionaires here are men who had the good luck to make a lot of money some years ago, and, putting their surplus into real estate, have become enormously wealthy through the wonderful increase in the value of Chicago dirt. Only the other day Senator Farwell told me his father-in-law, Mr. Dole, had sold for $75,000 a lot which cost him $75 twenty or forty years ago. [illegible] Dole, who perhaps would have been a millionaire but for his liberality, and [illegible] business [illegible] cattle buyer and Morris was doing common labor about the stock yards. One day Morris went to Dole and said he knew where he could buy a nice lot of cattle and make some money on them if he only had the capital. Dole lent him the money, and now Morris sends out a train load of dressed beef every day. Gustavus S. Swift, the king of cattle killers, whose establishment works up 10,000 head a week and sends the biggest part of it to the east in refrigerator cars, once kept a little seven by nine butcher shop in the town of Barnstable, Mass.

Not a few of our millionaires were country storekeepers, like Potter Palmer. This is a great commercial city, and yet if we except dry goods and clothing, few of our rich men have come up to affluence in mercantile pursuits. Edson Keith, a milliner and hat maker, is rich, but he has made more money in real estate than in millinery. William Blair and David Kelley got rich in hardware; M. D. Wells and John V. Doane have made two millions out of groceries, but this is about the extent of millionairedom in regular trade, aside from dry goods and clothing. N. K. Fairbanks, one of the best known, most intellectual, most aristocratic millionaires in town, has made his fortune in about the most dismal looking lard refinery there is in this city of packeries and refineries.

Lumber has been a fruitful source of wealth in this city, as one might expect from the fact that Chicago is and long has been the greatest lumber mart on the continent. Big money has been made in railroads, too. Francis Hinckley, a young man of 45, has just turned a round million in one railroad operation. He built a line with other people's money and sold it to the Santa Fe. The Keeps, Albert and Henry, of the Northwestern, and very rich men, used to be country store keepers up in Wisconsin. T. B. Blackstone, a lawyer, helped reorganize a road and came out of the deal its president. R. R. Cable and H. H. Porter are other millionaire railroaders.

Levi Z. Leiter, the Washington aristocrat who lives in Blaine's house, made his fortune in the dry goods business with Marshall Field, with whom he quarreled and has ever since been at law with about some real estate. George M. Pullman, as every one knows, came from the Erie canal, moved and raised houses in Chicago, tried mining in the west, hit on the idea of the sleeping car, acted as conductor of the first [illegible] people to ride with him, and is now one of Chicago's richest men. He is worth seven or eight millions.

One of the youngest millionaires in Chicago is Charles Hutchinson, son of "old Hutch," and a good one. He is only 33, and president of the board of trade; he is also at the head of the one great art concern in the west, the Art institute. He runs a bank and other important concerns. Our richest bachelor is Albert Munger, who inherited his wealth, which was made in grain elevators, a line that has turned out half a dozen millionaires. Munger, too, is interested in art, and has half a million dollars in fine pictures. Columbus R. Cummings, the head of the Chicago gas monopoly, has been in a good many things. He started out a country merchant, took railroad contracts, was in the nickel plate scheme, owned the Lake Erie and Western, put a few hundred thousands into a dry goods store, and finally came so nearly swamping himself in gas stock that wouldn't sell and gas bonds that people were afraid of that he had to sell out everything except his bank and make a bitter fight for life. Now he is all right again, and is still president of the Union National, one of the largest banks in the city.

There are several very rich bankers here. Mark Skinner, a Vermont Yankee, has grown rich making private loans and shaving notes. Samuel Nickerson got rich in the distilling business, and is now at the head of the First National bank, which, by the way, has larger deposits than any other bank in the country. Mr. Nickerson also owns a rock crystal, which is the most gorgeous thing of the sort the world has ever seen. It is as big as a goose egg, and is worth $10,000. He leaves it on the parlor table of his North Side residence during the day, but carefully locks it up at night along with his collection of crystals, said to be the richest in existence. One of Nickerson's neighbors is Joseph Medill, of The Tribune, the only millionaire editor in the city, though John R. Walsh, who owns The Herald, is worth several millions. Walsh used to sell newspapers, started the Western News company, is at the head of a bank, and The Herald alone has made him a millionaire.

The oldest millionaire in Chicago is [illegible] the millions on real estate. His favorite method is to lease a [illegible] ground [illegible] building on it, and [illegible] rental. He has bought [illegible] which he [illegible] one to fifty [illegible]. Potter Palmer, who came near being bankrupt after the great fire, and who [illegible] last of the [illegible] made by one man [illegible] four or five millions of [illegible] the largest rent roll in [illegible] building all the time, too. The youngest millionaire in town is Cyrus H. McCormick, whose father built the famous McCormick reapers. Cyrus is only 29, and [illegible] is unmarried.

BASE BALL.

The Five Points Defeat the Colorado Springs in the Third Inning.

The base ball game yesterday afternoon between the Colorado Springs and Five Points clubs was witnessed by one of the largest audiences of the season. The game was an interesting one throughout, though it was lost by the home club in the third inning through [illegible] errors. After that inning Ferm[illegible] son settled down and the visitors only secured one hit off of him during the remainder of the game. Bates pitched his best game of the season, and held the local sluggers down to four scattering hits. He was well supported by Everett. A. McLaughlin at short made a number of difficult stops, and Blake at second stopped a number of hard ground hits. Lynch, DeWitt and Fitzgerald made the most glaring errors of the game. The first named was way off in his playing and made a number of bad throws. McMahon played his customary strong game behind the bat, and supported Ferguson in fine style. Hunter gobbled a couple of pretty flies, and Lynch made a splendid running stop of a difficult grounder. The umpiring of Connell of the Five Points was not [illegible] satisfactory, though he gave the visitors the benefit of several [illegible] decisions. The score:

Catholics and the Schools.

To the Editor of the Gazette.

There is no denial of the Boston affair, but in his first letter Mr. Gardiner was more general and said the church and not some members of it. A few, or even many members, do not constitute the church. Though I like the way he speaks of the church, it seems strange that he should think it right to complain of an author that slights the Puritans but see no wrong in an author that misrepresents (which is worse than passing by) the Catholics. As long as man is man he will use the power he holds or can obtain. If the Protestants have their day, the Catholics have their's also, or should in justice be allowed to have it.

GEN. SHERMAN.

PERSONAL GOSSIP AND STORY ABOUT OLD TECUMSEH.

How He Looks, Acts and Talks. The Story of His Insanity and How It Arose--His [illegible]--His First Command.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, July [illegible].--Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman is here in Washington not [illegible]. [illegible] hearted old fellow [illegible] people like him! He was [illegible] commander of the army, the most popular man in Washington, as well as one of the most active. He walked about the capitol with a short, quick, nervous step, always had a cigar in his mouth and always another in his pocket for a friend. When Gen. Sherman smokes he smokes all over, so to speak. He seems to be disgusted with his cigar, and sucks in its nicotine as though it was the hardest thing in the world to get it to draw. He brushes off the ashes with a quick, nervous gesture, and throws away the cigar [illegible] half smoked. He uses the [illegible] only [illegible] as any man in the army.

He is not at first glance an extraordi[illegible] man [illegible] generals now living. In a crowd, if you did not know him, you might find many finer looking--and many better dressed than he. As to dress, he seems to care nothing for it. He always wears good clothes, but there is no pomposity about him, and his slouch hat is always puffed out, not in, and he never wears it on the side of his head, as do some of the younger officers.

It is said that he has an aversion to new clothes, and that he has never been seen in a complete new suit. He has an extraordinary head. It is big and full at the top, and seems to slope too quickly toward the neck. His brain is too big for his body, at least it would be so if the latter had not been developed into a bundle of iron tissues by the hardest of physical exertions. During his march to the sea he generally slept on the ground without a tent, and the earlier part of his military career gave him a constitution which lasts him well in his old age. His face is rough and it has an expression something like that of his [illegible]. His [illegible] decisive and he has a pair of restless blue eyes. The shape of his head was much discussed at the time it was alleged he was a lunatic. This was when he told Simon Cameron and Lorenzo Thomas that it would take 200,000 men to drive the [illegible] of Kentucky. These two gentlemen laughed at the idea, and would not accept his advice concerning Kentucky. Sherman then asked to be relieved. He was ordered elsewhere and Buell took his place. This was on Nov. 30, 1861, and on the same night the report that he was crazy was sent out by a correspondent of one of the New York papers, I think his name was Knox. It was a kind of [illegible] work on the part of this correspondent. While Sherman was still in a bad humor over the above interview Knox came to him and said that he belonged to the press and that he wanted a pass to the south. Sherman was not fond of newspaper men in those days and he told Knox he could not pass. Knox grew angry and replied that Secretary Cameron was in the city and that he could get a pass from him. Sherman was naturally enraged. He ordered Knox out of the country. He told him he would give him just two hours to leave and if he found him in his lines after that he would hang him as a spy. Knox left at once and went to Cincinnati and there circulated the report that the general was crazy. It was first printed, I think, in Cincinnati and from thence went broadcast over the country. The correspondent afterward wanted to be admitted to the army, but I am told Sherman positively refused to permit it. He was not fond of having outsiders [illegible] at any time, and I remember hearing the story how he sat down, so to speak, on one of the straggling congressmen who went out from Washington to see the engagement at Bull Run. Sherman was in command of a brigade at that time. He was looking over the field without a glass when a man in a citizen's dress stepped up and offered him his field glass. Sherman turned and eyed the man over. "Who are you, sir?" said he.

"My name is Owen Lovejoy," replied the clerical looking man. "I am a member of congress from Illinois."

"A member of congress!" retorted Sherman, witheringly. "A member of congress! Well, I should like to know what a member of congress is doing here. Get out of my lines, sir! get out of my lines!"

And he made him get out and sent him at once to the rear. This incident illustrates how little regard Sherman had for public opinion. In those days congressmen had much to do with making generals, and Lovejoy, for eight years a congressman, had considerable influence.

Gen. Sherman's family is missed here in a social way, and the general was the life of many a dinner table. He lived very nicely here in a three story brick on Fifteenth street a little below Chamberlain's club rooms and very near the White House, Wormley's hotel and the Riggs. Here he had an office in the basement where you could find him at odd hours working away. At the war department [illegible] the great building. He seemed to be always going at lightning speed. In Sherman's eyes the department clerk was as good as the long winded United States senator, and if he were in a good humor the clerk would be just as well received. If he were in a bad humor--and this was by no means uncommon--both had better keep away. This quality of Sherman's has tended much to the good of the army. Military men, especially of the lower orders, are inclined to pomp and snobbery. Sherman's blunt, off hand ways, his plain, practical ideas, and his bold way of calling a spade a spade has done much to foster common sense among the military men here.

Sherman's habit of sometimes letting his feelings carry him away [illegible] near being his ruin in the days following the accession of Andrew Johnson. Johnson, you know, repudiated his agreement with Joe Johnston at the time, though he afterwards practically adopted it. Mr. W. F. G. Shanks, one of the leading war correspondents at the time, tells the story. He says:

"Sullen at the repudiation of his agreement with Johnston, angry at the interference of Gen. Halleck with the co-operative movements of himself and Sheridan and furious at the countermanding of his orders by the secretary of war, he marched to Washington with his army, breathing vengeance upon Halleck and hate and [illegible] upon Stanton. No nation safely before witnessed such a spectacle--a victorious general, at the head of 80,000 men devoted to him and jealous of his fame as a part of their own, marching to the capital of the country with threats against his military superiors breathing from his lips and flowing from his pen. For days Sherman raved around Washington, expressing his contempt for Halleck and Stanton in the strongest terms and denouncing them as mere non-combatants whom he despised. He wrote to his friends and through them to the public comparing Halleck and Stanton to cowardly Falstaffs seeking to win honor for the deeds he had done, accusing the secretary of war of suppressing his reports and endeavoring to slander him before the American public in official bulletins. For days his army named the streets of the capital with the same freedom with which they had roamed through the fields of Georgia and the swamps of the Carolinas, and no man dared to raise his voice in condemnation of their leader or approval of the superiors who had opposed him. No republic ever survived such a condition of affairs, and this republic never was in such danger before, and yet the danger was hardly suspected."

This affair, however, blew over and Sherman was never called to account for his actions. No record was made of the offense against discipline which in any other country would have cost him not merely his position but his reputation, and in many armies his life. Still in all this he never meditated anything against the government and never forgot his [illegible].

[illegible] Sherman [illegible] at [illegible] his baptism and he showed that he had a mind of his own. An old [illegible] who lived in the town at the time of the occurrence, told me the story. It seems that, though both his father and mother were devout Presbyterians, he had never been baptized. A few months after his father's death he was taken to the church to have the rite performed. When his name was given to the preacher he objected to baptizing a youth by the name of a heathen Indian (Tecumseh). He wanted to call the boy simply William. But the future general would have none of it. He stopped the ceremony. Said he: "My father called me Tecumseh and Tecumseh I will be called. If you baptize me so, all right. If you will not, I will have none of your baptism." The preacher waived the point and the ceremony [illegible].

[illegible] the first part of Andrew [illegible] William Tecumseh [illegible] of [illegible] a sleepy country town of [illegible] a couple of thousand in[illegible] the store and listened to the older loafers tell stories. His comrades called him "Cump" and one of them says he was among the laziest of them, and that he could always be found at the stores of an evening. "He was a different fellow," says this gentleman, "from John, who was a great reader and a sort of a plodder. 'Cump' had a great idea of going to West Point, and he talked of it continually. I shall never forget the day his uncle finally got him his appointment. He was so happy he could hardly contain himself, and he almost walked on the air for several days."

Gen. Sherman graduated at the early age of 20, and entered the artillery, serving first in the Florida war, as first lieutenant during the Mexican war, in California as adjutant general. Ten years after he graduated he married Ellen Boyd Ewing, his patron's daughter. Ewing was then secretary of the interior, and the wedding came off in grand style at Washington. Clay, Webster, Calhoun and Tom Benton were all present, as was also the president [illegible]. [illegible] was [illegible] years [illegible] then. His beard was a dingy red, and he had a face bronzed with service in the west. The couple went to New York, Niagara Falls, and then came back here. Gen. Sherman stayed in the army three years after his marriage, but in 1853 resigned and went to San Francisco, where he opened a broker's shop. He afterward had a bank at No. 12 Wall street, New York city. But neither of these ventures could have paid very well, for very shortly after we find he left for Kansas, where Tom and Hugh Ewing, his brothers-in-law, were practicing at the bar.

Gen. Sherman had studied some law and he was fairly fitted to engage in the practice, but at this time he had no confidence in his speech making powers, and he made it a stipulation that he should not be called upon to plead. He was no speaker then as he is now, and he got along for some time without coming before the courts; but one day a case came up when both of his partners were busy. He concluded to try it, and studied it thoroughly.

He took his books under his arms and went off to the court rooms. It looked very clear to him, and he undoubtedly was right. But a pettifogging lawyer, whom Sherman knew and thoroughly despised, had the other side of the case. In the debate Sherman grew very angry and through his rage lost his case. He was so disgusted that he went at once to the Ewings, told them he would have nothing more to do with the law, and decided to go back to the army. A few days before this he received an offer of the superintendency of a [illegible] academy at a salary of $4,000 a year. This he accepted. Had he gained his case he would have probably refused it and the world would have lost a general.
